She is nice, friendly, and knows what she's talking about; she is just a really bad explainer. The homework is unrelated, and more than once she has given a quiz on material she has just taught. You will not get over 30 minutes for a test, always handwritten, about 3 questions, very lengthy questions. Study materials are unclear. Is absent often.

Quiz: Hard - Very little practice and quiz topic is unclear beforehand. HW: Not difficult & helpful office hours. Exam: High avgs. Many very specific definition questions worth 12-16%. go to review session to know which slides to copy to cheatsheet. Textbook: mandatory as the prof only has a few practice questions per slideset. Prof doesn't use it

I often couldn't understand what she was saying within the first 3 minutes of class. There's zero consistency between the lectures, quizzes, assignments, and exams. The test scope is vague and arbitrary, making it impossible to practice effectively. No curve at all — I scored above average and still ended up with a B.

Her weekly quizzes are much harder than what we learn in her lectures. Some of the material on the quizzes aren't even taught in her lectures, which makes them hard to prepare for. But the curve she gave was generous and I heard she was easier than many other CS101 profs.

She's a fine person, but she don't really know how to teach CS 201. I think someone is correct, she assumes that all the students have already known everything, so she usually cover the slide really quick. Her quiz and homework, and test are very tricky. For example, she asked the name of 3 conditions in the quiz.

No feedback was provided on all the quizzes and midterms taken. She speaks and writes scribbles on the blackboard during the lectures, and the handwritten lecture notes are hardly readable unless (perhaps) you've taken notes during the lecture and compared them. Good luck if you are designated to take this course during her iteration.

She makes you fly blind in this class. In one case, we were given a 30 minute window with only 20 hours notice to be able to look at our midterm. Most of the semester we had little to no feedback for our assignments so it was hard to know what we needed to work on.

RUN!!!!!! She's the worst professor I've ever met. She assumes we know everything and refuses to give a curve even avgs of tests are quite low. Extra credit only works for those whose grade is around the next letter grade, u may gain nothing to finish the extra credit perfectly. If u want to suffer a whole sem and mentally break down, choose her.

She assumes that students know everything. The assignments and quizzes are manageable, yet the exams are very challenging and include concepts that she rushed through last class. The absence of curves, delayed return of exam/assignment grades, and no response to emails contribute to a less than optimal learning environment. Avoid if you can.

One of the most boring and unhelpful professors ever. Lectures are horrible and she assumes you know everything and are a total genius after she explains something poorly once. BUT the homework and exams are super easy if you review slides, and the actual work portion of this class has been nonexistent. The work is easy she just sucks at teaching.

Definition of a mid prof. Assignments are short, easy, and sparse which is good. There are 4 pop quizzes which aren't bad if you are paying attention and doing minimal studying (they're predictable). The content can be tough but that isn't her fault. She made CSO one of my easiest classes even though she isn't the best, and I am grateful for that.

She is a fine lecturer, and clearly knows the information that she is teaching. However, she provides minimal feedback on assignments and none on exams, does not answer her emails, and takes almost a month to return exam grades. She even mutes students while on Zoom so as to "avoid distraction." She's fine, but wouldn't be my first choice.

Professor Kayar is good, but not amazing. She's very kind and a lenient grader. However, I don't think her teaching is the best; it gets the job done but I was often confused and had to study on my own to understand what she was trying to explain. I would still take her since she is a nice knowledgeable lady.
